The wood stoves listed above each have a thermal efficiency greater than 75% and satisfy the IRS requirements to be considered "qualified energy property" under Section 25C of the Internal Revenue Code. These stoves qualify for a tax credit for their purchase and installation costs under the energy tax credit package signed into law in December of 2019.

The amount of the tax credit for a qualifying biomass stove is $300. Consumers must keep a copy of this certificate with their tax records but do not need to submit it to the IRS with their tax returns.

The following restrictions apply:

- Eligible stoves must be purchased and placed into service in an existing primary residence between January 1, 2019 and December 31, 2020.
- The current tax credit can be applied to the purchase price and professional installation costs up to a maximum credit of $300.
- Homeowners who have taken advantage of previous energy tax credits may not be eligible for the current tax credit. There is a maximum "lifetime" energy tax credit cap of $500, retroactive to 2006. If a homeowner has used $500 or more in previous energy tax credits, he/she may no longer be eligible for the $300 credit currently offered.
